The chivalry of man, and refinement of woman, Had conspired to make the place more fair Than the Edopian dreams young lovers share When first the flame of love is kindled. Such the scene within. Yet in the midst of this Sir Benson paced the room with heavy tread And downcast eye. Deep anguish heaves his breast, His eyes dilat, lips quiver, and to his faithful spour He thus begins: dis eyes dilat, lips quiver, and to his faithful spouse. He thus begins:—

Be the conson — dust thirty years have rolle-Beround dince, joyful, we felt the pleasure of paternal cares, and centered our affections in our daughter fair.

Dur only child—Adelia. The genial sunshine of heaven, that ope's the fowers of spring, came not easier forth than our encircling love to watch her ripening years. If comely face, steaking eye, graceful form, a ready blush, and thankful smile, added to a mind Ever anxious to anticipate our least desire.

Can recompense a parent's love, we have no fault to find. But she's our only daughter—I will not chide the fates. But she's our only child—I bear great love to you.

But she's our only chid—I bear great love to you.

Mrs. B.—But what, my dear?

Mrs. B.—Our only daughter—our only child, Adelia,
Is getting bald—is nearly grey!

Mrs. B.—Are, my dear, but it frights me not.

Sir B.—Art woman born, and tear not grey hairs

Upon a maiden's head?

Mrs. B.—Once I shared your fears, but now no more.

Mir B.—Tis wondrous strange! Explain.

Mrs. B.—Therei my uncovered head reveals it ail;

For both grey and bald you know I were.

Doat like the explanation?

Mr B.—No more! no more! Name quick the magic word

To footman John. I'll ring the maid

To call Adelia, and also doff my wig.

Re quick—what is 't?
